

Rural Women Making Change

PARO together with the University of Guelph are conducting research in Northern Ontario this summer to help understand how transportation affects the lives of women living in rural and northern communities in Ontario. We hope that a thorough understanding of the challenges women face in getting to work, training and skills development opportunities and to services in general will be a starting point for changes in local and provincial policy.

You can be a part of this important work!

- Come and fill out a survey (20-30 minutes)
- Tell us your story about how transportation has affected your life and what you think should change
- Bring a survey to a friend or family member you know who has transportation challenges

All the information collected is confidential. Identities of all participants are coded to protect anonymity.
